"We could not be more excited to accommodate the new long-term home of Munck Wilson Mandala at Texas Capital Center in the heart of Uptown Dallas. They are a perfect fit as a prominent and well-established law firm, with additional offices throughout Texas as well as Los Angeles and South Florida," said Johnny Johnson, executive managing director of Cushman and Wakefield, the landlord of Texas Capital Center.

"Transitioning to the Texas Capital Center is a transformative step for Munck Wilson Mandala. Their new headquarters offers unparalleled amenities and a vibrant environment that will foster innovation and growth for years to come," said Campbell Puckett, executive director at Cushman and the tenant representative for MWM during the office relocation process. "This transaction, for several reasons, has been incredibly fulfilling, and it was an honor to assist them in finding their new home."

MWM moved from North Dallas where the firm had officed near the High Five Interchange, the junction of Lyndon B. Johnson Freeway (I-635) and Central Expressway (US 75), since 2007. MWM's headquarters employs 128 full-time attorneys and staff and is the largest of the firm's eight offices.

“Both new office spaces reflect our commitment to innovation and support our mission to create an environment where every team member feels connected and engaged,” said North Dallas managing partner David Doyle. “The new offices will help bridge gaps between job functions and practice areas and, most importantly, help meet client needs across the Dallas-Sherman-Fort Worth technology triangle.”
