Connie D. Powell Nichols is a partner and a tenured professor at Baylor Law School. With more than 20 years of experience in intellectual property, cybersecurity, data management, and data privacy, Connie brings unique legal knowledge to help clients protect their businesses. She advises clients on employment policies regarding IP ownership, and she conducts marketing, advertising, and promotional reviews, including evaluating product warranties, as well as drafting contest and sweepstakes rules. Connie's legal services include conducting board training sessions on ethics, privacy, and social media for government agencies, preparing social media guidelines and audits, reviewing e-commerce contracts, including terms of service and privacy policies, and ensuring compliance with the Online Protection Privacy Protection Act, California Consumer Privacy Act, the Children's Online Privacy Protection Rule, and the General Data Protection Regulations.

Connie also completed a fellowship in Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion and she uses her experience to train state, local, and municipal institutions on DEI as well as other clients.

At Baylor Law, Connie teaches Intellectual Property, Information Privacy, and E-commerce, and she is one of the only doctrinal professors in the country that directs the Intellectual Property Clinic. When she is not teaching or practicing law,

Connie enjoys time with her son, hiking Cameron Park's trails, participating in community and church activities, and supporting Habitat for Humanity.
